He's not the Messiah; he's a very naughty boy' (Terry Jones)

In order to briefly examine an example of TCT we should momentarily turn our attention away from extra terrestrial visitation and consider a few of the pertinent facts concerning the greatest story ever told.

We all know the story of Jesus. He was a non violent, teacher and visionary, who appeared in Israel and Palestine with a simple but radical alternative to the orthodox religious beliefs of the day.

He taught that spiritual salvation could be gained through peace, love and sacrifice and portrayed his God, not as the vengeful and terrifying Yahweh, but as a loving creator. Jesus also declared the Ten Commandments as out of date and said that we should have only two.

- 1; Love the lord thy god.
- 2; Love your fellow man.

The Sanhedrin, the powerful ruling priests, viewed this message and its progenitor as dangerously radical and that such revolutionary thinking directly challenged the power of their orthodoxy. Caiaphas, the head Rabbi, was no fool, he realised that this affront to their secular power would, if it took hold, loosen their iron grip on the people and vis-à-vis their secular and spiritual power.

Eventually Jesus had to be dealt with and with the help of the Romans he was arrested and a show trial was arranged which led to his pre-judged murder. However, through the original Christian teachings his beautiful words and inspirations were indeed powerful enough to have lasting consequences for Judaism therefore it was realised that the true message which Jesus espoused had to be subverted and the vital essence of his teaching corrupted. Despite these events taking place over two thousand years ago the above synopsis may appear all too familiar to the cognoscente of ufology.

'Can there any good thing come out of Nazareth?'
(St John, Ch 1 v 46)

Has the spirit of debunking or perverting the truth changed over two millennia?

To find an answer to that question we must continue with our biblical theme.

Sergius Paulas was a Roman citizen who was despised because of his tax collecting duties and for his custom of persecuting Christians, (Acts 8; 19; 122; 4).

Sergius, (in all probability a 'company man') is better known to us as ST. Paul (Saul) of Tarsus.

Paul it was who spread the gospel of Jesus abroad and as such is accorded great theological importance. However Paul had never actually met Jesus or had ever heard him speak, yet it was he who was chosen to spread the gospel after a blinding vision on the road to Damascus.

Thanks to Paul and his interpretation of events we now know Jesus as the son of God and his mother Mary, as the 'mother of God'. The fact that Jesus never referred to himself in that vernacular but as the 'Son of Man' is not only conveniently ignored by our spiritual masters but excused by the dictates of an ancient religious council headed by a pagan Emperor.

In A.D. 325, in a concerted effort to appease the Hellenistic craving for family orientated deities, Roman emperor Constantine convened a religious council at Nicaea where the debate was whether Jesus 'the Nazorean' teacher (A Nazorean was a Jew who had taken an ascetic vow) was to be elevated to the exalted rank of a God. In the spirit of appeasement and assimilation Jesus was narrowly voted in as the Son of God who was crucified and died for our sins from that day forth.

Barbara Thiering wrote in her book 'Jesus the man' Priests, Levites and kings were regularly thought of as incarnations of Gods, angels and spirits in a Hellenistic world where the idea of Gods coming down in the form of men was commonplace Christianity had come from being an obscure secret society to an rapidly expanding religion complete with its over zealous followers; therefore it was believed that in order gain control of this religion and promote it to the Roman and Greek worlds the Nazorean teacher, three hundred and twenty five years after his death, had to be deified.

Religious history is a colossal and enlightening study and as such the political expedencies of the day are well beyond the remit of this humble work, however, I recall a scene from the excellent movie 'The last temptation of Christ' which succinctly highlights the differences between the true message of Jesus and that of Paul more eloquently and descriptively than I could ever hope to achieve.

The scene sees Jesus (William Dafoe), listening to Paul (Billy Green Bush) as he preaches the gospel to a crowd of listeners. After the sermon Jesus takes Paul aside and points out that most of the facts of Paul's sermon about him were wrong and that he was missing the essence of his message.

Paul replies, sneering 'hey.... 'my' Jesus is better than your Jesus' .....

The rest as they say is history.

For two thousand years church and State have successfully combined to deliberately misconstrue and dilute the true and deeply esoteric message of peace and love that Jesus advocated and the success of religious mind control over such a concerted period of time, over so many people, could ordinarily be considered as a most remarkable feat in human and social engineering. However, most of us exist in a soporific state which blithely accepts such forms of gross psychological manipulation without let or hindrance.

What has this to do with UFOs I hear you say? Consider the fact that if Christianity was perceived to be such a threat by the authorities that they had to infiltrate, subvert and sanitise its message, could not the popular and growing 'belief' in E.T. visitation be construed as equally dangerous? In such a case is it not conceivable that the authorities would also distort and subvert the truth of such an earth shattering revelation as UFO reality?

Before leaving the religious aspects of conspiracy, doublespeak and control we should consider the following quote from one Monsignor Corrado Balducci taken from one of his many appearances on Italian television.

"We can no longer think... is it true? Is it not true? Are they truths or are they lies, if we believe or if we don't believe--no! There are already numerous considerations which make the existence of these beings into a certainty we cannot doubt." Monsignor Balducci is a Vatican theologian who is close to the pope and who has been charged with studying reports of UFOs sent in from Vatican embassies around the world. And here is another.

For nothing is secret, that shall not be made manifest; neither any thing hid, that shall not be known and come abroad' Luke Ch 8 V 17

Orson's Trap

Whilst I have attempted to demonstrate that the authorities have no problems in perverting the truth I will now attempt to turn the argument on its head.

What would the ramifications be of Government disclosure which stated that 'Aliens' had been visiting our planet since time immemorial and were actually here: NOW!

Such an admission would undoubtedly, I am sure you will agree, constitute the single most important event in the history of mankind since the crucifixion and would constitute a massive change in the course of our evolution as a species.

Nevertheless, I believe that past Governments have considered attempts at such a disclosure which have in turn been postponed. Why? One need only consider the alien invasion of Grover's Mill, New Jersey, USA which happened on the evening of October 30, 1938.

Hold onto your hats, I haven't gone mad. The Mercury theatre production of H.G. Wells 'War of the worlds', produced by Orson Wells, has gone down in infamy as a radio drama that on the above date caused mass panic, with millions of Americans believing that aliens (Martians) were carrying out a full scale invasion at Grovers mill. They ran screaming to the hills in panic and some grabbed their guns and mustered to the defence of Grovers Mill defenders.

The panic was equally pronounced in New York City, as one Bronx resident describes.

"I lived in an apartment house. Everyone ran out and looked at the sky to see if they were landing. Can you imagine all those people coming out of their apartment houses?"

Despite this incident entering the realms of UFO urban myth the reality was that there was no mass panic as is so widely believed, however there was 'some' panic and I believe that it prudent to examine this incident from different perspectives. Many people may have tuned in to the radio show just as the realistic reports of Martians were wading across the Hudson River, wiping out thousands of troops with their black gas and deadly heat rays. Was this all a coincidence? Could this entire production simply have caused a stir by accident? Or could it be perceived of as a social experiment? The recorded reaction of the public in believing the Martians were invading would have provided the United States Government with some ideas of the consequences of their intended disclosure on extra terrestrial visitation and the resulting furor would have given the authorities the notion the any disclosure of extra terrestrials visiting our planet would have to be considered more as a long term project.

With ETH disclosure now on the back burner a method had to be devised which would allow for a more subtle seeding of the human consciousness.

Hollywood movies and laterally television were regarded as ideal propaganda tools by which the ETH desensitisation programme could begin. So successful has this programme been that only a man from another world would fail to recognise the archetypical oval head and large black almond eyes as the face of a 'Grey' alien.

'One more Time'

A few years ago a drama was aired on UK TV which showed alive broadcast from the site of a crashed UFO in Canada. Whilst the event was pure fiction the programme began as a normal sitcom type show which was suddenly broken into after around three or four minutes by a special live SKY news alert, read by regular newscasters. I was well aware that the show was to be aired and plonked myself in front of the box in anticipation. I must admit that I was almost fooled myself by the opening sit com shots and was preparing to move to another station (the sit com was truly awful) when the newsflash burst in claiming that a UFO had crashed somewhere in Canada.

I smiled ruefully and settled down to enjoy the show.

It always happens, you just get settled when the telephone rings.

'Hello'

'Davy' a voice shrieked down the line, 'a UFO has crashed in Canada and 'things' were coming out of it' ....silence.....'Its on sky news, are you watching it?

The call was from Bill, a work colleague, who was normally an intelligent, sober minded senior psychiatric nurse who n this occasion had been turned to jelly, as sure as he had been zapped by a Martian heat ray.

To my great amusement Bill had fallen head long into Orson's trap and it took me some time to reassure him that what he was seeing was a fantastic fictional account of a UFO crash landing, portrayed in a non fictional manner.

Bill was convinced 'they' had landed and it took me some time to persuade him to accept my re-assurances that the Earth was safe....for the moment.

Once the penny had finally dropped Bill was more than mortified and he swore me to complete silence about the affair, especially at work.

After I had stopped laughing, I realised the extent of Bills fear and this valuable lesson encouraged me to take a greater interest and cultivate a deeper understanding of the psychological implications of the ETH on ordinary people.

A world in chaos is a world which cannot be governed and in reality is unsafe for us all, therefore in a concerted effort to protect long established power bases is it any wonder that the age-old synarchist masters of manipulation, continue to peddle plausible denial of the UFO phenomena?

We consider humans to be masters of all they survey and yet, to my regret, our species appears to act as though sleepwalking and until we awake from our evolutionary slumber we shall remain far too immature to accept the psychological realities of the ETH.

Judging by the American public's reaction back in the Thirties and that of my friend Bill in the nineties it can be clearly understood that disclosure of extra terrestrial visitation to our world would almost certainly create forms of popular panic and shake the foundations of religious and political beliefs as well as rocking the international economies of the world.

MISSING TIME!!

A Personal Experience Of A Missing Two Hours.

By Ellis Taylor.

A friend from Australia was staying with me recently. Unfortunately her visit was cut short and she had to withdraw from a string of engagements here, in America and New Zealand.

Amongst these was a conference near Norwich in the UK, where we were both to speak on the contact experience. Mike Oram stepped in at the last moment and the conference went ahead. My talk was on my lifelong interactions with other-worlds and beings from these other worlds and dimensions. It went very well but this is not the subject of this article. My friend had booked an emergency flight for Saturday morning (7th August) but she needed to visit close relatives and friends who lived in North Walsham in Norfolk before she left. I offered to drive her to Norfolk and friends invited me to stay with them near Long Sutton, just over the Norfolk border in Lincolnshire.

We reached North Walsham at 3pm on Thursday 5th August. I stayed for a cuppa and a chat was given directions for the quickest route to Long Sutton and drove away at 3.30pm. I was told it would take just over an hour. As I motored towards Thorpe Market I made a mental note to stop after Kings Lynn to phone and let my friends know when I would arrive. I also reminded myself to telephone my partner when I arrived at my friend's house.

The drive was smooth and uneventful; no hold-ups or delays. After some time, as I approached Kings Lynn on the A148 road, I suddenly noticed a parking area on my side of the road and felt compelled to drive into it, which I did. The parking area was hidden behind a row of trees and bushes. One other vehicle was there, a white box truck with a name on it that I recognised but can't remember now. I parked up behind the truck, telephoned my friend and told her I was about 10 miles the other side of Kings Lynn from her and would probably be about 40 minutes. (I gave myself extra time in case I met any delays.) I hung up and drove out of the parking area. As I did so another white truck was approaching from my right so I put my foot down and drove on towards Kings Lynn. Then I noticed that I felt somehow disorientated, groggy, queasy and burnt. I put it down to the long driving I had done and the hot day even though I had rested at North Walsham and anyway felt perfectly all right when I drove into the parking place. A little down the road I noted a sign that said Kings Lynn 6 miles.

As I drove up to some traffic lights in Kings Lynn I had to choose between two lanes. One to turn left and the other to carry straight on. I knew I needed to drive straight on but chose the lane to turn right. I felt extremely confused but did manage to see I was in the wrong lane before I got to the lights so I stopped, indicated to get into the correct lane and someone let me through. It was a little slow getting through the outskirts of Kings Lynn but nothing too tiresome. However I still felt very strange indeed.

As I drove towards Sutton Bridge I suddenly felt my consciousness click into another gear - it was like waking up suddenly but not fully. Suddenly two round red signs with white bars across them and one atop the other struck my view. I immediately recognised them as 'NO ENTRY' signs...and slammed on my brakes - as did every other car behind me. They also (understandably) began to thrash at their horns and (no doubt) deliver streams of obscenities. Still not fully awake I could see a stream of cars crossing from the other side of the road in the other lane but nothing in front of me on my side. I was so confused I didn't know whether I was barred from crossing the bridge. I then reasoned that I must be able to because there was nowhere else to go even though the NO ENTRY signs clearly (to me) said I could not. I gingerly drove across. In less than 10 minutes I was at my friends and she was putting the kettle on. As she did so I remembered that I had to phone my partner so I said to my friend, "What's the time, about 5 o'clock..."

"No", she said, "It's 20 to 7!!"

I couldn't believe it; three hours to drive 70 miles. A journey I was told would take me about one hour!!

My friend said "I wondered where you got to. You telephoned me at 4.15. I thought you must have gone for a look around Kings Lynn or something."

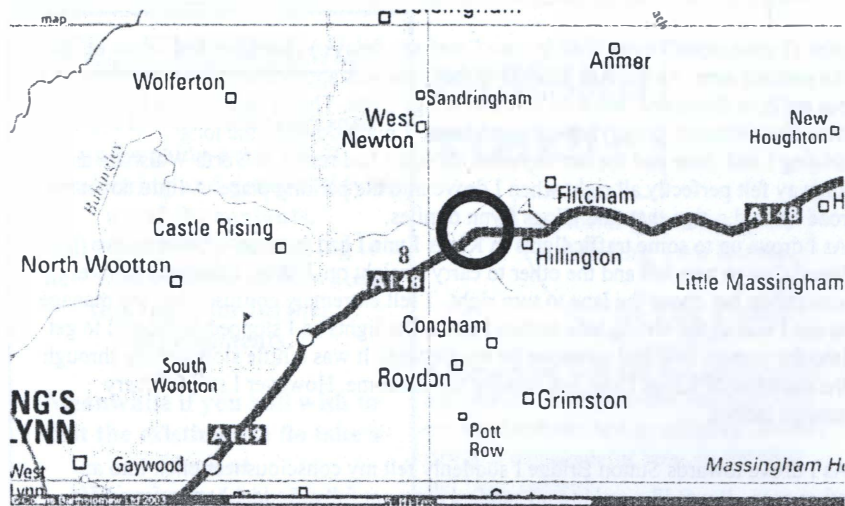

I still felt disorientated, queasy and hot. My coordination was hampered and found everything very difficult to do. Gradually during the evening I felt better and better but it wasn't until the next morning that I realised what I had risked - without any comprehension of the peril at the time.

Something happened to me at that lay-by. I'm convinced of it. I lost approximately two hours somewhere. My fuel gauge (oddly) read the same in the morning as it did when I left North Walsham, unfortunately I didn't take notice of the mileage. But even my cars don't run on fresh air.

You might have noticed the date and the time. This was the beginning of the Eve of Lughnasadh or Lammas Eve a powerful moment in the earth's rhythm. I later discovered that the parking area is only 2 or 3 miles from the royal residence of Sandringham and opposite the B1440, which leads to it. Is there a doorway through time near Sandringham?

Missing Time...most definitely, but what happened during that missing time...and why? This was not the first time for me and perhaps I'll get round to writing about the other occasion's some time.

I've since realised that the parking area is on at least two energy alignments I have been investigating. In common with many of my experiences the number 4 features strongly in the details of this event.

A couple of days later I drove over the bridge again and the "NO ENTRY" signs were not on top of each other. They were on each side of the roads on the pillars.

*The missing time phenomena, as long been a part of the alien abduction scenario. As such, it does come in for its fair share of criticism. Consider this: Even with the proverbial smallest chance that these events are happening as described by thousands of the worlds contactee/s, experiencers, and abductees, only one of them as to be right for the whole phenomena to be real. Ellis' encounter with just such an experience is typical of the events known as missing time. We welcome other such reports and articles to EYE magazine for inclusion. ## In Memory John Edward Mack, M. D., October 4, 1929, to September 27, 2004.

John Edward Mack, M.D., was Professor of Psychiatry at Harvard Medical School and Cambridge Hospital, as well as Pulitzer Prize-winning biographer for his work on Lawrence of Arabia. Yesterday afternoon in London, he spoke before the T. E. Lawrence Society Symposium, in Oxford, England. According to Will Bueche, Communications Director for the John Mack Institute in Cambridge, Massachusetts, Dr. Mack's presentation was so well-received that he was asked to do a second presentation yesterday evening. Afterward, he went with colleagues to dinner. He had called the family with whom he was staying after 10 p.m. to say he would arrive at their home around 11 p.m., London time. At 1 a.m., the London police confirmed that John Edward Mack, M. D., had been pronounced dead on a street near the Symposium's location, killed by a motor vehicle.

Dr. Mack has been a leading authority on the spiritual or transformational affects of alleged non-human entity encounter experiences (Abduction - Human Encounters with Aliens © 1994). Dr. Mack received his medical degree from the Harvard Medical School (Cum Laude, 1955) after undergraduate study at Oberlin (Phi Beta Kappa, 1951). He is a graduate of the Boston Psychoanalytic Society and Institute, was Board certified in child and adult psychoanalysis and Director of the John Mack Institute, Cambridge, Massachusetts. ## Space Call From ET Sep 2 2004

ALIEN messages may have been found in a bizarre radio signal. Astronomers have recorded three incidences of the space signal - totalling one minute. They think it is from an ET after ruling out known interference or objects as the source. The signal, called SHGb02+14a, comes between Pisces and Aries, where there is no obvious planetary system for 1000 light years. It was found by the Search For Extra-Terrestrial Intelligence team, who run search programs as screensavers on millions of home computers. California University researcher Eric Korpela believes the 'message' is real. He said: 'I can't think of any way to fake it.'

See Below...

Reports of SETI@home Extraterrestrial Signal Highly Exaggerated by Amir Alexander

September 2, 2004:

A rash of reports in recent days that SETI@home has discovered a likely signal from an alien civilization are highly exaggerated, says SETI@home Chief Scientist Dan Werthimer of U.C. Berkeley.

The storm was initiated by an article in New Scientist magazine, which reported about SETI@home's most promising candidate signal to date, and speculated about its possible origins.

Like all of SETI@home's 5 billion potential signals, this candidate, labelled SHGb02+14a, was assigned a numerical score representing the statistical likelihood that it is indeed an intelligent extraterrestrial signal. Its relatively high score placed it among the 200 "top candidates" selected for the targeted re-observation sessions that took place in March of 2003 at the Arecibo Radio Observatory. Of all the candidates targeted in the sessions, however, SHGb02+14a was one of the very few to be confirmed during the re-observations, and the only one whose score following the sessions actually went up.

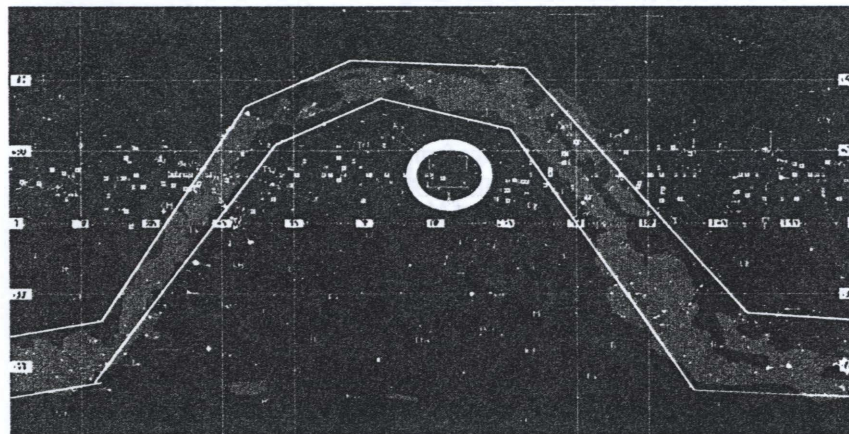

While this makes SHGb02+14a interesting, the chances that it actually represents an intelligent signal from beyond remain extremely slim. Random chance alone would make it probable that at least one of the billions of candidates detected by SETI@home would be observed on three separate occasions, as was the case for this candidate.

Furthermore, as we reported in the SETI@home Update of May 17, 2004, the fact that this candidate's frequency drifts rapidly makes it extremely improbable that it is a transmission from extraterrestrials. Because of the drift, explained Werthimer, "if we had looked at the sky even a few seconds later we wouldn't have found a match" for this candidate. A signal that drifts so quickly that it can only be heard for seconds at a time at a given frequency can only be detected by blind luck. Needless to say, such a transmission is an unlikely vehicle for message from an advanced civilization.

At Arecibo the giant radio telescope still scans the sky, looking for an alien transmission. Around the world, millions are still crunching SETI@home data on their personal computers. The Search for extraterrestrial intelligence continues at full speed, but as of now there is no breakthrough.

Of course, this could change at any time... We promise to keep you posted.

A sky map of the re-observations that took place at Arecibo in March of 2003. The areas within the white lines represent the plane of the Milky Way, the gray strip the band of sky seen from Arecibo. The circle mark the locations of the signal candidates revisited during the re-observations sessions.

Humanoid face mysteriously disappears from Mars !

The history of Martian studies is filled with mysterious aspects.

On July 25, 1976 the US spacecraft Viking-1 photographed an astounding formation on the surface of Mars. The 1.5 kilometer-long object bore resemblance to woman's face. The photograph produced a sensation in the whole world - almost all newspapers and magazines of the world published the picture on their pages, the image of the Martian face was on constant presence on television. Astronomers said the image of the face on the red planet was a wholly incidental trick of nature. The face, however, was oriented on the Martian meridian, but it was considered incidental too. Specialists from the Boston-based Analytic Sciences created a 3-D image of the above-mentioned structure and discovered the image of the 'humanoid face' on it indeed. Having intensified the contrast of the shaded right side of the image, specialists found the second 'eye' situated about 100 meters beneath the 'nose.' To crown it all, there was something reminiscent of 'teeth' too. According to the results of the analysis, specialists concluded the anomalous formation could not be of the terrestrial origin. Furthermore, engineers Vincent DiPietro and Gregory Malenaar found another image of the face in the archives of Martian photographs. The picture was taken with different lighting 35 days after the first original image was taken. The detailed computer analysis proved the peculiarities of the first picture and revealed new details as well. One could see an 'eyeball,' a 'pupil' and 'teeth' on the sun-lit 'cheek.' The two engineers concluded that if the details of the stone head were of the natural origin, the nature would have to be a reasonable creature.

On June 25, 1995 the NASA administration included the test photoshoot of the Martian face in the program flight of Mars Global Surveyor spacecraft. The mission control received the long-awaited photos on April 5th, 1998. The spacecraft took pictures of the face from the height of 440 kilometers (in 1976 the images were taken from the height of 1,870 kilometers). To everyone's great disappointment, the photos depicted only uneven landscape - one could not see any facial outlines on them at all. One might think NASA officials fabricated the shots - it could be the simplest explanation for the whole matter. However, the history of Martian studies is filled with mysterious aspects. One may recollect Martian 'channels,' for instance. Scientists have been observing Martian channels for many years. It was documented that hardly visible channels split into two or turned to wide stripes. Astronomer Giovanni Sciaparelli, the discoverer of channels on Mars, mentioned the Erinnis channel in his reports. The channel vanished from Martian maps for a long period of time, although it appeared on them again in 1941. Scientists have not found an explanation to periodic changes of color on certain areas of Mars, sudden dust storms, a series of inexplicable accidents that happened to Martian rovers on their way to the planet, and mysterious flashes of light (about 400 flashes were observed in 1894 when Mars neared Earth). On December 8th 1951, Japanese astronomer Tsuneo Saheki saw a bright spot near the Martian lake of Titonus. The spot was glimmering for five minutes. Japanese scientists observed two of such flashes in 1954, four of them were registered in 1958. It is not ruled out that the Martian natural disasters ruined the image of the face on the planet.

Steven Spielberg is going to give the HG Wells classic flick War of the Worlds a make-over and Tom Cruise has signed on for the starring role.

Production for the movie is due to begin in November and Spielberg plans to have it released by the end of 2005.

When Orson Wells first broadcast War of the Worlds as a radio play in 1938, listeners thought the news of an alien invasion was real. On October 31, 1938 The New York Times ran with the headline 'Radio Listeners in Panic, Taking Radio Drama as Fact' and the story "A wave of mass hysteria seized thousands of radio listeners between 8:15 and 9:30 o'clock last night when a broadcast of a dramatization of H. G. Wells's fantasy, "The War of the Worlds," led thousands to believe that an interplanetary conflict had started with invading Martians spreading wide death and destruction in New Jersey and New York".

"The broadcast, which disrupted households, interrupted religious services, created traffic jams and clogged communications systems, was made by Orson Welles, who as the radio character, "The Shadow," used to give "the creeps" to countless child listeners. This time, at least a score of adults required medical treatment for shock and hysteria".

The original War of the Worlds movie is considered the definitive alien flick. The original movie, released in 1952, starred Gene Barry as Dr Clayton Forrester.

In 1978, it was reconstructed as a musical by Jeff Wayne. The album version featured legendary actor Richard Burton, Julie Covington, David Essex, Justin Hayward from the Moody Blues and Phil Lynott from Thin Lizzy.

Kathleen Kennedy and Paula Wagner serve as the film's producers and the screenplay is by David Koepp ("Spiderman," "Panic Room," "Jurassic Park").

The Search For Liveable Worlds Published:

Scientists eager to find life on other worlds - or at least ones that might support Life as We Know It - felt a shiver of excitement last week. Three teams of astronomers reported finding the smallest distant planets yet detected, suggesting that Earth-size planets with benign climates might be just around the corner. But there was a bit of discouraging news as well. A new calculation suggests that scientists may be looking in the wrong places for messages sent by any distant intelligent beings. The pace of planetary discovery has been steadily quickening.

A decade ago scientists did not know of even a single planet outside our solar system. Now they have found more than 100. Of course, they haven't actually seen them. They are far too distant and dim. Instead, scientists have inferred their presence from the slight wobbles their gravitational pull causes in their stars or from a slight dimming of a star's light as a planet passes across it. Until last week, all the planets detected had been huge, gaseous blobs circling their suns at very close range. That is no surprise. The bigger and closer a planet is, the more likely it is to cause its star to wobble. But two American teams and one European team have now detected planets the size of Neptune or Uranus, some 14 to 20 times the mass of Earth.

These planets, too, orbit their stars at too close a range for our form of life. But scientists say they are increasingly comfortable with the notion that there are an enormous array of planets out there, and that some of them are bound to be rocky orbs with temperatures that can permit liquid water and possibly life. Probably no Earth-size planet will be found until NASA launches a planet-hunting spacecraft in coming years.

Meanwhile, scientists searching for extraterrestrial intelligence will still scan electromagnetic waves reaching Earth for signs of a message that a far-off civilization may have sent. The theory has been that radio waves or lightwaves are the fastest way to send messages across interstellar distances, so they are the most likely form of communication for an intelligent civilization. But an analysis in Nature this week suggests that a message longer than just a "Hi, we're here" kind of thing would be sent most efficiently in physical form, much like a message in a bottle. That suggests that we should be looking for the alien equivalent of a letter in our own planetary backyard, analogous to the monolith left on the moon by aliens in "2001: A Space Odyssey" by Arthur C. Clarke. The only hitch is that such a message, travelling at a crawl by space standards, might have been sent 30 million years ago, and who knows whether the senders would have moved on or died off in the eons since. Best not to give up on electromagnetic messages entirely.

The Mexican Flap

In the last issue of EYE we included brief details of an alleged sighting of 11 unexplained objects seen in the skies over the state of Campeche (Yucatan Peninsular) of southern Mexico.

In an unprecedented move for the Mexican authorities, the release of an officially filmed (by the Mexican air force/armed forces) video tape, showing what appears to be 11 unexplained objects following a drug enforcement aircraft on patrol, over Copalar, Chiapas in the State of Campeche (Yucatan Peninsular) of southern Mexico. What follows is the alleged official version of the incident.

ANALYTICAL INITIAL EXPOSITION.

The equipment specified in the section of General References, single they establish the detection of the movement in the case of the Radar, and heat presence taking one differentiates with the temperature of bottom. The specified FLIR single provides images of qualitative and non quantitative value. Due to it the materials taken and provided by the single officers byshot establish visual parameters and digital numerical non parameters.

Falsified equipment more allows to store in a card type PC MCIA a total of 170 mega byts of information, same which píxel establishes numerical patterns of providing information of ranks of temperature by píxel, distances and specific forms of bottom.

When lacking this equipment and this information, the images single let place to establish of optical and deductive way some aspects of Chemical order, electrical, magnetic and electromagnetic, as well as some interesting phenomena related to the systems that are in the surroundings, of the study objects, as they are halos specific, clouds, reflections and studies of relief.

GENERAL CONDITIONS.

The located zone of flight counted on optimal meteorological conditions, winds non greater to 35 km. / hour, a relative humidity of 72% and one temperature average of 34° C. To the 10.500 Fts. of height, the temperature average is of -27° C. and a visibility of a 96% average.

The region does not register volcanic activity, in the same way, tectonic movements were not registered. Power stations of storage and distribution of electrical current of importance were not detected.

On the basis of the previous thing, were not sources of electrical phenomena, magnetic on the part of electrical power stations or seismic movements, nor possibility of effects of fire ball by volcanic activity.

One did not register solar storm nor significant solar explosions then, reason why the luminance effects of ionization would be desconsideranas it is the fire of Saint Elmo or electrical storms.

ANALYSIS.

Had to the deficiency of quantitative values on the part of the equipment, single we can establish qualitative estimations from the images and the experiences of the operators in turn, of such form, that the following detected patrons leave a logical explanation based on normality aerial technology with which tells around the world and that he represents to be the conventional one.

In the following image two symmetrical objects of spherical nature areappraised, suspended about to 10.700 Fts. Of luminous conditions, of radiating type, same that presents/displays the emission of I haul each one of them.

The observed conditions lend the following points of analysis.

- 1.- the observed halos follow patterns of magnetic induction fulfilling the model of the Dynamo type a2.

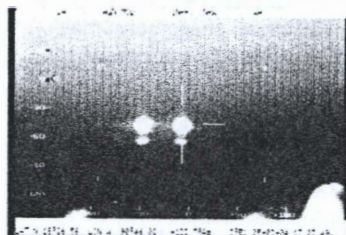

This model is sustained by the Dr in Physics and Mathematics S. Childress that in its treaty of Kinemática established the form as fields of the toroidal and poloidal type similars could be obtained to which any planet generates a field electromagnetic.

Its model  $JB'/Jt - kmV2B = (v - B0)$  determines the magnetic field derived from the fluctuating parts of each object. This way the circuits formed by the fields are similar to the observed ones in the image, reason why one determines that I pull ahead is evident sample of him.

- 2.- the induced field is radial and the diameter of the object propagates of concentric way to a distance of 13 times, observe that the clouds do not present/display any I pull ahead although the FLIR detects thermal emission of them, what demonstrates at sight that I pull ahead is not product of an emission or a thermal reflection of the sun, but means of thermal dissipation thanks to the electromagnetic field present in the study objects. The present aerial positioning systems, their sustenation and displacement by means of the mechanics of fluids do not depend on these principles for, and of the dynamics of flowed in continuous means, the systems of magnetic dynamics govern on the basis of the emission of stationary power plants in earth due to the great amounts of consumption and generation. There is technology still no created to attend so highest demands of energy in systems reduced and much less in systems closed and independent as it would be it an airship. In order to generate a field induced as it is appraised in the image it requires at least to generate a magnetic field average of 200.000 Gaussian. This magnitude single is obtained by counted laboratories in the world with highest systems of control and security. I do not see like being able to obtain it of independent way by an isolated object in the atmosphere.

3.- Although the previous model comes and it is sustained in the mathematical relations provided by Maxwell:

$$\begin{aligned} V \times H &= J + \frac{1}{c} \frac{dE}{dt} \\ V \times E &= - \frac{1}{c} \frac{dB}{dt} \\ V \cdot B &= 0 \\ V \cdot D &= \rho \end{aligned}$$

These can sustain the presence of magnetic fields of Turbulent Dynamo type, same that was developed by the Dr. in Astrophysics E. N. Parker ( $B = B_0 + b$ ), originating secondary fields that could be susceptible of voluntarily technological address, in such a way that they could sustain the presence and represent the vortices of greater energy and to be the centers of thermal attraction by the thermal sensors of the FLIR. So and as we appreciated it in the inferior part of the image. These principles single have been in the behavior of stellar bodies, in technology not thus controlled, since the fields are so intense that not yet we counted on the development as much scientist as technological to obtain it. It is possible to clarify that these disturbances are not the centers of the field that generates the object, since as can see the concentric radial field of each object does not have by center of reference to the point where it detects the FLIR. The origin reference is the same central object.

The magnetic field of an object is greater to the one of the other, indicating with it that they are independent to each other, indicating more likely that one of them is slightly more far, or in its case it emits a weak field but.

4.- the images in relief show the presence to us of two masses that move back ground as it demonstrates the mass to it of the cloud, indicating to us that the echo caught by the effect of magnetic resonance of the radar is correct and real, reconfirm and o itself with the synchronous detection of the FLIR, this is both radars at the same time detect thermal presence and of mass in the same place and.

Thus also the image in relief lets see that the field also emitted disturbs to means leaving a track in relief on the atmosphere in the peripheral zone of the objects. Before this evidence that shows the image to us at issue, it is not justified that the operators could not see the objects at first considering that these in special were not beyond of 2 miles of distance, at least which these objects emitted in the phantom of the infrared, of such form that being thus I do not locate any technology of obtained airplane navigation until the moment that is sustained under these principles.

To this point I down present/display some technological suggestions of vanguard on camouflages elaborated by the University of Tokyo but.

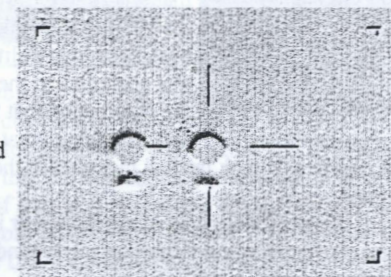

5.- Another distinguishing element within this analysis to the caught objects that the pain is worth to stand out is the following one:

The combination of the observed magnetic field that surrounds jointly to these objects with its displacement, it originates a same deformation of the very typical one to the hope done within the electrodynamics of magnetic fields in continuous means.

This is, the magnetic field generates a friction with magnetic means present in the atmosphere originating ionization phenomena at the time of which one of them tends to move. This movement causes a typical deformation on the generated field of the object, with it and due to the magnetic induction of the object, it is become deformed orienting itself to the zone of ionic unloading to justify its balance with the medio. ambiente.

This zone is by nature the against its displacement, generating a wake type "jet" of unloading and a deformation of the field in that direction. This phenomenon with their details can be seen in these images, being this, another element that justifies and gives evidence that these objects have and they are used intense magnetic fields for his navigation, and sustenation anti gravitational.

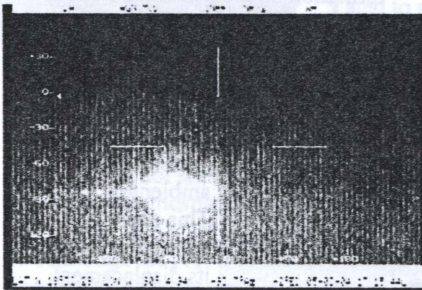

6.- Another important aspect is the following one: The nature follows a universal law inexorable. The Entropy,  $\delta Q/T \geq 0$  said in other words the principle of the disorder.

The natural events base their random principle on this universal law, reason why the natural systems tend to this principle, so the recurrences of airplane combat formation of these objects as it is appraised in the images do not obey this law natural, responding to controlled events unnatural and necessarily of technological order by its control of navigation.

The evidence taken and registered by the officers in charge of which the objects turned 180° when they are ordered to return, it does that this act on the part of the objects, he is deliberate, deliberate and intelligent.

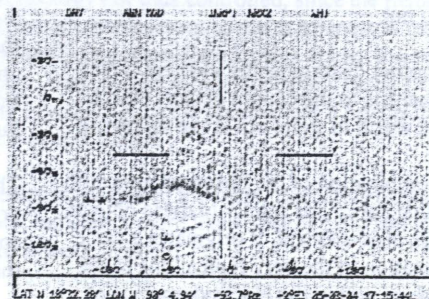

On the other hand the formation is symmetrical and they are repeated in groups as a formation. The approach of these objects to the official ship is perceived that it is strategic, of such form which the officers who enjoy preparation and qualification in military tactics detect that according to the movement and to the distribution that took these objects they considered that they were surrounded by such. To the degree that took tactical measures at the time of extinguishing the lights of the airplane.

Although it did not have it demonstrates some of aggression or it threatens on the part of these objects, their movements and formation correspond to tactical maneuvers, ordered, pre deliberate and intelligent.

7.- With respect to the thermal sources detected and indicated by the FLIR in the following image, it is possible to make an observation to detail of this phenomenon.

In the first place one considered if these luminous points comprised physical of each object or in its case they would have to be considered like independent of them... Our initial expositions aimed at that they comprised integral of them, consisting of a type of extension of its structures, nevertheless a deeper analysis revealed that it could be a magnetic mirage according to the following following signals and to the principle of mathematical physics of fields of sincrotónico type.

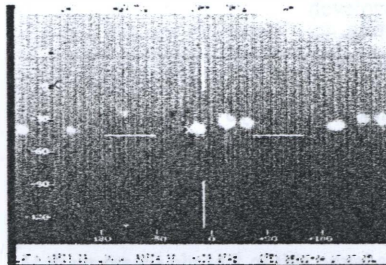

This can be observed of the following way, in the first place halos the radial fields generate propagation concentric drawing whose changes of frequency are those that they give the evidence of them.

On the other hand, the two luminous sources are located underneath the radiating objects and not in another position, this is, so that they are not located to the sides or in its case it arrives of the object.

The answer can be discovered with the following observation and the following hypothesis:

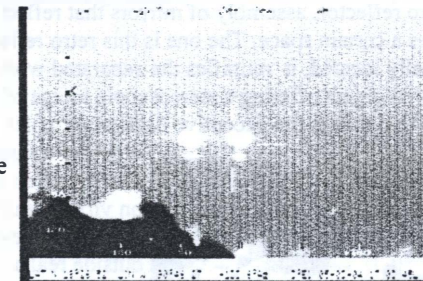

The sources are located exactly in the radial frequency of the first one I pull ahead visible, observe that the sources physical connection with the greater sphere is not appraised to them.

Starting off of which these objects when having mass this one is attracted the center of mass greater than it is the Earth and that this is underneath the objects, we must establish with it that the vector of gravity of the mass of them aims downwards and it does not stop another side.

Considering that the halos are evidence of intense and dynamic magnetic fields, it takes to us to establish that the interaction between the magnetic field of the greater sphere and the vector of gravity that also is a force, they interact of radial and physical way, generating a vortex power that as well, it emits light and heat, for that reason the sensors of the FLIR are sensible to this phenomenon and they detect it.

The models of this vortex already have been established by science, in the first place in the year of 1965 the Dr. In Quantum Physics Richard Feydman Nobel prize in that same year, it described in its theory of Quantum electrodynamics, that in the interaction of two fields of force being one of them magnetic one, a field of quantum torsion as a means is generated of normal way to it whose sense is against the normal vector of reference.

The laws that govern this principle were established by the Dr. V. Vladimirovsky in 1949 opening with it the theory of sincrotónicaradiation, the principle and its formulation this in the following image:

INVISIBILITY "VANGUARDS OF THE CAMOUFLAGE"

At the moment the Dr. Susumu Tachi of the University of Tokyo has developed but known the technical outposts of camouflage like "Vision same Cistalina" or "XTALVISION" that obtains the invisibility effect on the matter.

The specific references of the Dr. Susumu Tachi is the following ones:

Email: to tachi@star.t.or-Tokyo.ac.jp

The initial technique in its phase 1 consisted of the following thing:

A viewfinder that combines images in movement and that is able at a distance to reflect them in clothes articles, it creates the illusion of the transparency of the matter and the appearance of invisibility, according to it has verified Japanese engineer Susumu Tachi, of the University of Tokyo. The result of the experiment is surprising, since thanks to the optical device of which the person object of the experiment is transparent.

The used technique denominates optical Camouflage and it is based on a very simple idea: if an image of which projects it is behind a person on the clothes that dress then, the illusion that is created is that the body of that person is transparent. The technique can be applied to a real scene in movement through a retro reflector, assembly of mirrors that reflect from diverse angles a certain space. The one is this retro reflector that, strategically located, it reunifies the separated world by at sight a material object offering a stereoscopic image of the "other side" that makes the deceptive illusion of which that material object is transparent.

The intention of these works on virtual reality consists, on the one hand, in developing a device that allows an observer to touch outside real a virtual object as if. For this work the crystalline vision is also used, very adapted to obtain an effect of "increased reality". This increased reality is the one that allows to confuse, or to unify, a virtual scene with real and a the one that can obtain that a real hand can be observed taking part in a digital space.

On the other hand, these works develop thus to the call optical camouflage. It is the technique that allows that the objects become transparent, thanks to the perfect synchronization that obtains between the real objects and the virtual ones. The works that are developed in the Tachi Laboratory, of the University of Tokyo, they are pioneering in the development of innovating applications in the field of the virtual reality. In addition to the invisibility, it also works in the tele-existence project, that it consists as much of the manipulation of remote objects, like in to obtain that the life in virtual spaces, individual and shared, it is developed with real sensation of presence.

At the moment phase 2 of this novel and surprising optical effect, it tries to incorporate this optical technology to nano tecnológicas membranes, the membrane at issue will incorporate necessary the optical technology for this stereoscopic effect.

Annexed archives of animation of this optical development provided by the same Dr. Susumu Tachi. This system of camouflage could make hair net apparently the mass, but we would register its heat emitted through infrared sensors as well as electromagnetic resonances by means of radars.

In this article we will examine the phenomenon of poltergeist activity and some of the common features it shares with other paranormal events e.g. apparitions and encounters with extraterrestrials. While the explanations I intend to give are of necessity speculative, they do supply definitions that cover most, if not all, of the necessary parameters and they are also implied by recent developments in quantum science. However it is vital that the reader maintains an open mind regarding the events discussed and accepts the findings of particle physicists. Bear in mind that all quantum theories so far tested as our technology permits have been proved 100% accurate. Hopefully the reader will also find some of the points raised challenging and cause for re-assessing their view of reality

The Poltergeist Enigma

The very word 'poltergeist' is enough to cause feelings of unease and disquiet in most people. The connotations and half-understood emotions produced by this term have no real foundation except in the primitive emotional centres of the 'old brain' and the reasons behind this reaction stretch back many centuries if not millennia. Traditionally viewed as a supernatural occurrence, the spontaneous movements of objects associated with poltergeist activity have instilled genuine fear into those afflicted with the unwanted manifestations. Although conventional, rationalist science dismisses poltergeist activity as irrational nonsense, nevertheless the outbreaks continue. Churches tend to view poltergeist activity rather differently than more traditional examples of supernatural happenings, e.g. ghostly apparitions and alleged hauntings, and normally attempt to comfort those so affected. It is something of an embarrassment to both church and science that the manifestations occur at all and at the end of the day, in spite of all the denials and protestations, there is nothing either discipline can do about them or prevent them. Traditionally, churches, particularly the Catholic Church, although slightly uneasy about it still maintains the use of exorcists; even the Vatican has an official exorcist, Fr. Gabriel Amorth. They will, if all else fails, and only with strict approval, attempt to remove an unwanted presence with the appropriate ritual and incantations and depending on the situation sometimes this works and sometimes it does not. Other denominations within the Christian faith abandoned exorcism some time ago although some of the charismatic and fundamentalist sects maintained the practise using their own interpretation of the ritual. In an apparent demonstration of synchronicity, it has recently been reported that the mainstream Presbyterian Church of Scotland, is now seriously considering re-introducing exorcism in the wake of increasing incidences of alleged manifestations of supernatural activity. This is after a hiatus of approximately eighteen years during which time the service of exorcism was officially proscribed. Worryingly, their interpretation of poltergeist attacks tend to focus on the possession of human beings by 'demonic forces' and the act of exorcism can, in some instances, be genuinely dangerous to the point of actual physical harm befalling the unfortunate person afflicted.

Judaism and Islam also recognise the existence of poltergeists and other manifestations of 'spirit' whether good, bad or indifferent; they both also recognise demonic influence. Whether or not evil in the form of possession is a real and separate phenomenon is difficult to quantify, and there are several mental illnesses that produce symptoms identical to those displayed by people who are allegedly possessed. These include schizophrenia, multiple personality disorder and a number of other conditions. There is no doubt that in times past, mental illness, especially when coupled with physical deformity was automatically interpreted as demonic possession and the person so afflicted either locked away for life or piously murdered by the church and state. In more modern and supposedly enlightened times, mental illness although no longer carrying the same stigma, is nonetheless still largely hidden away from the public gaze and there are repeated reports of outbreaks of violent paranormal activity within the walls of psychiatric hospitals.

Is it possible that rather than signs of insanity, the symptoms displayed by some categories of psychiatric patients are actually demonstrations of latent Psi abilities? Is this not a curious use of language, demonic possession and demon-stration; is there a semantic link? Certainly, there is an ancient interpretation of the word, demon, as meaning teacher, which given its use as part of words like 'demonstration' seems appropriate. The use of modern psychiatric techniques and pharmaceuticals can and do control the effects of apparent mental aberrations, but what if these chemicals merely suppress, not an illness, but a genuine manifestation of an altered state of awareness or a latent psychic ability? Is it possible that where in times past those claiming enlightenment were ignored, imprisoned or put to death, they are now deemed 'cured', and convention, perhaps out of fear, still totally ignores what may be a genuine example of communication with entities from other realities? Where poltergeist manifestations are concerned then we are confronted with a series of examples of apparently genuine physical events; the movement of objects, noises and in some cases, disembodied voices. Quite understandably, those afflicted with these occurrences are more interested in stopping what happens as quickly as possible rather than investigating the possible causes, but where investigations have taken place there is clear evidence that the laws of physics are not being broken. Unfortunately, there is still a strong belief, probably incorrectly that somehow 'spirit' is involved, so, what is spirit, an intangible manifestation of that which religion is founded upon or something else?

Perhaps we should consider what happened during a few purportedly genuine poltergeist manifestations; most people will recall the Oscar winning, infamous and genuinely terrifying film, 'The Exorcist' portraying a series of terrifying events that befell a young girl and her family. What is not generally known is that the events portrayed are based on genuine happenings that occurred in the early spring of 1949 in either the town of Mt Rainier or nearby Cottage City, Maryland, USA. There is some confusion regarding the actual town, due perhaps to a desire by the civil and church authorities to protect the identities of those involved. The events centred on Douglass Deens, a thirteen-year-old boy, who, to conceal his identity, was known only as Robbie, became interested in various psychic phenomena, including the use of the Ouija board, through his aunt who was herself already a medium. The events began around January the 10th with the sound of scratching in the walls and the random movement of household objects, more worryingly for the family a picture of Christ shook violently. The boy, Robbie, felt his bed being scratched and he not surprisingly he began to suffer from frequent night-

to use the Ouija board to in an attempt to communicate with her and although the phenomena continued, his general demeanour changed to one of agitation and irritation.

Eventually the family took him to see a local Lutheran minister, a Rev. Shultz, who decided that there was the possibility a poltergeist had manifested through the boy and his use of the Ouija board. The minister took the boy into his home for a few days to observe both him and the phenomena. While he was there, Rev. Shultz observed objects moving by themselves and after seeing the boy's bed shake, he moved the mattress to the floor where he saw it glide over the floor. The minister advised the family to take Robbie for psychiatric evaluation at the University of Maryland, which they did, but after a series of evaluations no evidence of mental abnormality was found and Rev. Shultz advised the family to take their son to see their local Catholic Priest.

It should be pointed out that the Catholic Church has official guidelines to differentiate between 'good' and 'bad' supernatural visitations, viz. divine blessing or satanic interference. Divine visitations are deemed to induce a series of positive benefits including the ability to heal, prophesise, work miracles and speak in tongues. There are likewise psychophysiological symptoms that are taken into account including levitation, luminous rays, fragrant odours, prolonged fasting and of course stigmatisation. The Church also claims that unlike those who are demonically possessed those whose rapture is induced by the Holy Spirit remember all that has transpired and their intellect is 'elevated'. It is not too clear precisely what is meant by 'elevated' but it is inferred that the person so affected contemplates pious and/or spiritual matters to the exclusion of the purely secular. According to this interpretation the unfortunates whose possession, although virtually identical, is deemed demonic remember nothing of their experience and are liable to suffer adverse physical symptoms. In general, it is worth taking a closer look at these phenomena because either singly or in any permutation they are often recorded during other, non-religious paranormal events, particularly poltergeist activity.

The effects of Robbie's apparent possession included many of the symptoms listed above and because of the negative ambience surrounding him were deemed demonic. His family took him to see a Father Hughes at the St. James Catholic Church in Mt Rainier where he continued to manifest the phenomena. Fr. Hughes reported his findings to Cardinal O'Boyle who after examining the evidence authorised a church exorcism. During the ritual carried out in Georgetown Hospital Robbie manifested some of the actual occurrences featured in the film including projectile vomiting. Following an attack on Fr Hughes that left him with a deep slash stretching from left shoulder to wrist Robbie was released with the exorcism incomplete. The family then took him to St. Louis where a professor at St. Louis University saw him; a Jesuit priest referred to only as Father Bishop SJ. The priest contacted a colleague, another Jesuit called Father Bowden of St Francis Xavier Church. After visiting Robbie, the priests received permission, this time from Cardinal Ritter to conduct another exorcism, which they commenced on the 16th of March 1949. During this very lengthy (but eventually successful) ritual they witnessed more alarming phenomena including large items of furniture moving around the room. The boy lay writhing on the bed cursing and blaspheming at the priests and eventually the priests had him moved to a hospital run by the Alexian Brothers, a monastic order. Here, with his family's permission Robbie was baptised into the Catholic Church and two weeks later on Easter Monday, April the 18th, the exorcism came to a sudden end when following a sharp, loud noise that was heard throughout the hospital, the entity departed from his body. Robbie remembered nothing of his experiences except a vision of the archangel Michael. The newspaper 'The Washington Post' ran the story on the front page of its August 20th 1949 edition under the headline, "Priest Frees Mount Rainier Boy Reported Held in Devil's Grip". Another very similar case involving a young Irish girl was reported in 1960 in the village of Sauchie in the county of Clackmannanshire in central Scotland. In this instance, although many of the events were identical to those described above, there were no concerted efforts to conduct rituals of exorcism. During the course of a re-investigation of the case conducted in 2000, among other original witnesses I managed to interview one of the doctors (Dr William Logan) who treated Virginia Campbell, the girl at the centre of events, for the duration of the occurrences. He was in no doubt that there was something bizarre and genuine happening to the girl and he heard the sounds of rapping and knocking several times. There was originally a cine film taken by another attending doctor (a Dr. Nesbit) capturing some of the kinetic phenomena (doors opening and closing and furniture moving around etc) but I was unable to locate the film, which may now, regrettably, be lost. The eventual outcome of this particular case resulted in the phenomena gradually fading away, until after several months it finally ceased completely. Such was the trauma experienced by those involved in the events that even today they will not discuss the matter and in the course of my re-evaluation of the case this was made clear on a number of occasions. This is understandable although frustrating from a research point of view but the feelings and fears of those affected must be respected.

Before leaving this section it is worth pointing out that during an interview, Dr Logan made a telling point.

On one visit to the Campbell household he heard loud knocking emanating from the headboard of the bed Virginia was laying in. he described the knocking as having a unique, odd, hollow quality to it. Dr Logan explained that he had never heard this odd quality of sound before and it was many years before he did again. When he did so it was while attending for a medical examination using an MRI (Magnetic Resonance Imaging) diagnostic device. When the machine was operating he heard exactly the same noises as the powerful, magnetic, imaging fields were generated. I have been checked out using one of these devices and they are indeed noisy and there is a strange hollow quality to the sounds produced. While not conclusive it does perhaps help to indicate one possible reason for these strange manifestations, the creation of electromagnetic vortices powerful enough to have a physical effect on the environment. Was this the cause of both Douglass's and Virginia's ordeals and if so why?

The conventional explanations for poltergeist activity tend to focus on either pubescent or troubled children, usually although not exclusively female, or households where there are strong emotional problems and traumas. This can include the powerful negative emotions generated by constant rowing and squabbling 'feeding' entities and giving them a portal into our reality from the astral plain, (which is in reality just another name for a parallel dimension). In some cases exorcism seems to remove the offending entities, although once again it is not clear why, but perhaps the reason lies in the neurological and genetic make up of the exorcist. Are they able to interact with and alter reality? Are they able to enter altered states of consciousness and confront the entities in their own realities? Why this should be the case is not obvious and neither is the mechanism behind it, perhaps because the subject has indeed long been considered 'beyond the pale' by conventional science. However, perhaps now we begin to see the glimmerings of an explanation for what has in the past been regarded as magic.

Shadows and Orbs

There is one more class of 'visitor' that although glimpsed surprisingly frequently, is less well known than the more traditional manifestations of the 'other side' and these are the 'Shadow People'. They are also more likely to be dismissed as a straightforward case of a trick of the light or tiredness than the more readily accepted examples of paranormal sightings. Shadow people are the figures often glimpsed from the corner of the eye and vanish once full vision is directed at them. Precisely what they are presents a genuine puzzle, but the answer may be more readily available than expected. They have been seen lurking within shadows, and in appearance they are humanoid but not necessarily human ranging in height from a few feet to over seven feet tall. Some theories suggest that they are in fact spirits like the rest, but in some manner their energy field is 'denser' which enables them to be seen. This seems to align them with the phenomenon of 'orbs', which, when photographed are sometimes shown to cast shadows; 'orbs' it is frequently suggested, are the souls of the dead. However there are at least another two explanations worth considering. Are they in reality visitors from parallel universes, or do they inhabit the invisible worlds beyond the spectrum of visible light in the infrared and ultraviolet? Both of these explanations are plausible and since they have some basis in scientific theory there is less necessity to take it solely on faith. As we shall see in the next section there is already some basis for making these assertions.

The Scole Group

While there is a considerable body of evidence supporting the existence of both possession and poltergeist activity there are very few attempts to explain the mechanism behind them other than they are caused by spirit. Whether they are or not becomes secondary to the hard physics that allows them to function in the real, physical world. Constructive and innovative experiments by people like the 'Scole Group' who attempted to obtain positive proof of life after death are most helpful and illuminating. During a series of procedures of almost five years duration they obtained a remarkable range of results including examples of photographic and written examples of communication from the 'other side'. There were also examples of 'apports' or physical objects produced out of 'thin air' in a séance room appearing from time to time. From my perspective there was also one particular manifestation of great interest and that was the appearance of an entity the group dubbed 'blue'. This entity appeared on several frames of videotape along with other bizarre images of pyramid shapes and what look like planets. The entity, 'blue', was so called because of the overall blue colouring that was present on the image; in fact, 'blue' was identical to the ubiquitous 'grey'. The explanation given to the Scole experimenters via the mediums and psychics they used was because the entity, along with others, was from another dimension existing in parallel with our own. According to the spirit guides acting through the mediums, these entities continually attempted to gain access to this reality by any means necessary and worryingly many of them were not friendly towards us.

Before leaving the findings of the Scole Group it is worth examining the appearance of 'apports' in some detail because it has much in common with poltergeist phenomena. It is this particular phenomenon that although seemingly mundane, blows conventional, Newtonian physics out of the water. Traditionally, apports tend to be small items usually of a personal nature, like medals, coins, keys, buttons and items of jewellery, although small pebbles also appear. They appear spontaneously in séance rooms as 'gifts' from the 'spirit world', one of the common feature of apports, all apports, is they are always warm to the touch when they first appear in a séance room. The question here is how do they appear out of nothing after, presumably; having passed through brick and wood. There is only one possible explanation and it takes us right back to quantum physics; they are dismantled to their component subatomic particles, or, they are altered in frequency to permit passage through apparently solid matter. Bear in mind that for all their seeming solidity, all items in this continuum are actually composed of more empty space than solid matter and all that prevents us from walking through them is the simple fact that we exist at the same frequency as they do. To disassemble these items to their component atoms and rebuild them would easily explain the reason for the heat felt when they are touched, is surprising that they are now hotter than they are. We must never lose sight of the fact that in order for this to happen, the items and the entities producing them must obey the physical laws existing in this reality irrespective of what passes for normal in other continuums. It has been suggested that the 'cold spots' frequently felt and measured during poltergeist and other paranormal manifestations are the source of energy required for the manifestations to occur; thermal energy converted to kinetic energy, what we do not understand is the transfer mechanism. Since the laws of thermodynamics indicate that heat should travel to cold, is it feasible that whatever the mechanism is, it exists of necessity in the unseen continuum where the entities dwell? There is yet another point to consider, why do they bother with the demonstrations at all, is it a genuine attempt to gain our attention, is it an involuntary, uncontrollable reaction, or are they merely playing with us out of a sense of boredom?

Conclusion

The haunting and beautiful opening verse by Blake sets in poetry the nature of subjective reality and thoughtful musings such as this, when combined with the findings of quantum physicists that tends to lend credence to claims that there are indeed a series of dimensions existing in parallel with our own and the only reason that we cannot normally contact them is because they exist at a different frequency from our own. Even although Newtonian and rationalist science regards quantum physics with a good deal of suspicion and contention if not sheer disbelief, it still reluctantly accepts it because it possesses a core of legitimacy and repeatability. On the other hand anything gleaned from 'non-scientific' sources is a non-starter. Even the pioneering work of such luminaries as Dr. John Mack a professor of psychiatry of Harvard Medical School is likewise dismissed as 'unscientific'. Dr. Mack has for some years realised and espoused that there is little or no difference between accounts of paranormal events and ET encounters and a complete reassessment of outlook is required when dealing with these matters.

Fortunately, the evidence supporting the probability of additional realities populated with other, non-human beings and ruled by Non-Euclidean physics is gradually being amassed. If we are in fact interacting with these beings (albeit for the most part inadvertently) and if they are able to tap into our frame of reference, then they must be able to manipulate and integrate their physics with ours. Once we can accept this, and develop the necessary interfacing technology, then the possibility of direct interaction with ghosts, poltergeists and indeed ET's becomes a reality and not a matter for conjecture.
